REPORT.

To the Select and Common Councils of the City of Philadelphia.

The Board of Directors of Girard College beg leave to present their Annual Report for the year 1866. In taking a survey of the Institution for the past year, they have great pleasure in saying that its condition, both as regards its educational and disciplinary departments, is encouraging and cheering. The pupils have, in the vast majority of cases, improved the opportunities afforded them for receiving a liberal education, whilst their conduct and deportment have been marked by a continual progress in the right direction.

To understand the practical working of the College requires an intimate acquaintance with it in its various departments, a knowledge of the machinery which is in daily operation in order to carry on its work, familiar intercourse with its inmates, and a correct appreciation of the labors of its President, professors, teachers, prefects, and governesses, whilst engaged in the performance of their duties, in guiding, instructing, counselling, and encouraging those committed to their care,—the subjects of this vast and excellent charity. It may not then be amiss to give a sketch of the actual condition of the College, to call attention to the daily routine of duties devolving upon those entrusted with the administration of its affairs, and to furnish an insight into its varied operations with their nature and character.

Life in the College is divided into two great departments, namely, those of education and discipline. These are distinct, and yet so sufficiently blended as to make the influence of each upon the other co-operative and harmonious. The department of instruction is committed to the charge of five professors and numerous lady teachers, who are occupied during the day in imparting useful knowledge to the pupils, under a system of education regulated in compliance with the terms of Mr. Girard's will. The subjects to be taught are indicated in this instrument, and form more than what is usually termed an ordinary English education. The studies embrace not merely reading, writing, grammar, arithmetic and geography, but navigation, surveying, practical mathematics, astronomy, natural, chemical and experimental philosophy, drawing, book-keeping, and the French and Spanish languages. To these are to be added such other learning and science as the capacities of the several scholars may merit or warrant. With so wide a field before them, the professors and teachers are diligently occupied during the school hours of each day, in imparting to their youthful charge a knowledge of the various subjects embraced in the list just given, and in training them up in such habits of study and mental discipline as may render them capable of appreciating the instruction thus afforded, and for self improvement after their connection with the College shall have ceased. It must be apparent to every one that Mr. Girard had higher views than rendering all of the pupils of this Institution mere ordinary scholars, fitted to be put apprentices to a handicraft, and to be toiling as unremunerated operatives all their lives. For whilst it is true he has made apprenticeship a necessary part of the course to which every inmate of the College is to be subjected, he had the correct view of labor as honorable in itself, and in this free country so to be united with intelligence and education, as should enable its possessor to rise from the condition of a mere journeyman into the position of a merchant, a sea captain, a manufacturer or a tradesman, one carrying on business for himself, and making his way in the world by thrift, and knowledge, and industry. And his views were correct in theory, although found not to be entirely so when carried into practice. For in this land of liberty the idea of having any one as a master is repugnant to the immature ideas of those just launched into the busy world, and such ideas seem to be proportionably increased by the amount of education previously received. Nevertheless, in many instances both theory and practice are productive of good results, and the pathway of toil is seen to be the one best fitted to secure for those subjected to it, ultimate success.

The second great division of the College is that which takes charge of its discipline. Whilst it is true that this in the school-room is confided to the professors and teachers, yet they have no supervision of the pupils after their labors in their own peculiar departments have ceased. Immediately, therefore, upon the pupils being released from the confinement of the school-room, they are taken charge of by governesses and prefects, who have the oversight of them during the remainder of the day. These form the police of the Institution, the guardians of the boys, who are appointed to watch over their manners and their morals, to attend to their habits of personal cleanliness, to be with them during their hours of recreation, to see that the lessons for the next day are well prepared, and that they retire in proper order to their dormitories, when the hour in the evening arrives for that purpose. The prefects and governesses are responsible for the whereabouts of those committed to their charge, and to that end must have the roll frequently called, to ascertain that there are no delinquents, and they are bound to report at once to the President the absence of any whose absence is unaccounted for. They are to be the friends of the boys; those to whom they can go for counsel or advice, companions with them in their games and sports, and ready to sympathise with them in their difficulties and troubles. It will thus be seen how necessary it is to have these positions competently filled, the responsibility being so great, and the disposition required for the discharge of its duties so different and opposite, as to demand that those who are naturally fitted for the office should occupy it, to the end that its duties may be properly discharged.

In order that good habits may be impressed upon those committed to our care—such habits as shall best prepare them for their situations as apprentices upon leaving this Institution—the hour for their rising in the morning varies from six to half past six during the year. They are then taken charge of by the prefects, who accompany them to their lavatories, where they are occupied in performing their daily ablutions. Each pupil is furnished with a separate portion of a shelf, in which his various brushes are deposited, and also with the use of a looking-glass. Besides this daily duty regular baths of the whole person are taken at least twice a week throughout the year. The hair of every pupil is cut every six weeks, and his personal cleanliness insisted upon. Each boy has two full suits of clothes—one for service during the week, and one for Sundays—both made of good substantial materials, avoiding any appearance of uniformity, in pursuance with the directions in the will, and varied with the season, being lighter in summer than in winter. His under-garments and stockings are also warm and comfortable, and the latter, together with his linen, are changed twice every week.

After being thus thoroughly cleansed, they are taken to breakfast. This consists of tea with bread and butter, to which, during the winter, a relish is added of either hash or salt mackerel. Coffee is given them for breakfast on Wednesday mornings. After breakfast, the household is summoned to the chapel, where devotional exercises are had, appropriate to the commencement of the day. At about eight o'clock, the work of instruction begins in the schools, and continues until ten, when a recess for a quarter of an hour is given, after which instruction is renewed, and continues until twelve o'clock. The pupils are then allowed recreation in the playgrounds until half-after twelve, when the hour for dinner arrives. Care has been taken so to vary this repast as that, whilst the pupils are fed with good and substantial food, it shall be afforded them in such variety as shall best contribute to their growth of body and general healthfulness. They are furnished with meat every day and two kinds of vegetables. On Mondays and Wednesdays roast mutton is provided for the older lads, and stewed or fricasseed pieces of the same kind of meat for the smaller boys, and on Tuesdays, Thursdays and Saturdays they have roast beef. On Friday they are provided with corned beef and coffee, and on Sunday with the same kind of beef, cold. This fare is varied during the winter by soup on Tuesdays and Thursdays. On Sunday there is always added to the dinner a dessert of ripe fruit whilst in season, or, in default of that, of stewed fruits, and occasionally through the week a plain rice pudding, or mush and hominy, with molasses, is given in addition to the meats and vegetables. Now and then, too, a condiment in the shape of something sour, is afforded, by way of relish, as an anti-scorbutic.

After dinner, there is another period of recreation until two, when school again commences and continues until four, with an intermission of a quarter of an hour at three, and at four o'clock the labors of professors and teachers terminate, except as to some of their pupils who are retained, either by reason of misconduct in the school-room, or deficiency in learning their lessons, until the allotted time of detention has expired. At four, the pupils and household again assemble in the chapel to thank God for the mercies of the day, and to implore his protection during the night. These chapel exercises are accompanied by reading the Bible and singing hymns.

We have connected with the College a regular instructor in music, under whose guidance the boys have learned to sing quite creditably, and we have found this exercise a valuable adjunct in maintaining both good order and good feeling amongst our youthful charge.

After the evening exercises in the chapel are concluded, the boys are again permitted to go to the playground, where they remain until their evening meal, consisting of bread and tea is ready, after which they retire to their section rooms, in order to study their lessons for the ensuing day. These are prepared under the supervision of the prefects and governesses, with whom there is kept up a daily communication by the teachers; a book being sent by the latter to the former, having charge of his or her pupils, in which is set down the lessons for the next day, together with all failures for the day that is past; those guilty of failure being obliged to re-study the lessons in which they have been found deficient. Sufficient time being allowed for this purpose, the members of the various sections retire to their dormitories for the night—the time for thus retiring being varied according to their respective ages. The dormitories hold from five to thirty boys, each of whom occupies a separate bed, whilst a prefect or governess sleeps in an adjoining room, so that in case of sickness aid may be promptly afforded to the sufferer, or disorder be quelled if any should take place.

The play-grounds are large and ample, and are divided into two parts—one for the older and the other for the younger boys. Whilst upon the playgrounds, no restriction is laid upon them as to their engaging in any sports, provided they are not accompanied by danger of personal injury, or likely to result in an exhibition of passion or violence. During the winter the skating pond affords facilities for indulging in that exercise, which is eagerly embraced by those accustomed to it, and in the summer the various games of ball find an equally large number willing to participate in them, whilst the stream of water used in the winter for skating furnishes during the summer an excellent and safe bathing ground.

For several years past, the discipline of the College has been greatly improved by the establishment of Classes of Honor, composed of our best pupils—those who, in point of conduct, general deportment and scholarship, seem entitled to be trusted with greater liberty of action than the rest. These Classes of Honor consist of three degrees, the third being the highest, and the candidates for each being on probation for a month, in order that it may be ascertained whether the distinction has been worthily conferred or not. To the third degree unusual indulgence is extended; they have a study room and dormitory of their own; can go where they please upon the College ground during the periods of recreation, and are not at all times under the superintendence of a prefect. They are allowed to visit their friends three Saturdays every month—whilst the boys in the second degree are permitted to visit them two, and those in the first one Saturday in every month—but no higher rights are accorded to those in the second and first degree than that of this visit. These classes are arranged once every month, after a full scrutiny into the conduct and merits of every applicant, and has proved a powerful stimulus in exciting obedience and hard study. Of course, any flagrant violation of the privileges thus afforded is visited by instant removal from the degree, so that a continuance in well doing can alone enable the fortunate possessor to maintain his position. Besides this, we have what is called the Roll of Star Scholars, consisting of all who obtain a monthly average of 9 5-10ths in any study (10 being the highest mark), who for every star are allowed to go out on a Saturday afternoon.

The boys, without reference to these distinctions, provided they are not restrained as a punishment for some breach of discipline, are permitted to visit their friends once every three months, and are visited by their friends in the College once in every three months.

On Sundays the pupils remain in their section rooms in the morning until half after ten, during which time instruction suited to the day is communicated to them, when the exercises in chapel commence. These consist of prayer, the singing of hymns, reading of the Bible, and an address by the President or an officer of the Institution, or a layman of some Christian denomination. After chapel is over, the boys are permitted to go on the play-ground for exercise, but not to play, until dinner time, after which they again assemble in their section rooms, where they remain until the hour for afternoon service, which commences at three. These services are so framed as not to be tedious or tiresome, and last about one hour. Whilst in the section rooms on Sunday, they are supplied with appropriate books out of the library which each section has as its own property.

As a further incentive to improvement, a yearly distribution of prizes takes place during the Christmas holidays, under the supervision of the Committee of Discipline and Discharge, when the pupils who merit it, by attention to their studies and correctness of deportment, are rewarded by gifts in the shape of books, skates, knives, portfolios, writing-desks, and other useful articles.

The health of the pupil is carefully attended to. Their teeth come under the supervision of a dentist three or four times in the course of a year, whilst the services of two skilful physicians, each of whom serves alternately for a period of six months, are called into requisition in case of sickness. These make daily visits to the College, and more frequent ones in case there is need for any closer observation of the disease. Every pupil is instructed to go to the infirmary as soon as he feels indisposed, no matter how trifling the indications of disease may be, so that the case is watched from its very inception, taken at once into hand and vigorously treated. Thanks to a kind Providence, during the last year we have been again blessed with an unusual degree of health. Frequently none of the beds in the infirmary have been occupied, and never in proportion to the large number of inmates. There is scarcely a family in our City, consisting of ten or twelve, where all are well, and yet in our household of some four hundred and seventy, there are rarely more than a dozen on the sick list, including those who suffer from a slight headache, or some trifling indisposition. And as a further evidence of healthfulness, we have the pleasure of stating, that although the cholera prevailed in our City during the summer of 1866, no single case approaching to it was found within our walls. At the beginning of the year 1866, the number of pupils was five hundred and nine. During the year, twenty-one have been apprenticed to various trades and occupations; the indentures of two were cancelled while in the College, for the reasons that their families were about moving to a distant State, and had become capable of providing for them. Two have died, and eight have been expelled under the provisions of the will, as being "unfit companions for the other orphans in the College." These dispositions reduced the number of inmates on December 31, 1866, to four hundred and seventy-six.

During 1866 the Directors were unable to admit any new pupils into the Institution, in consequence of the income of the estate not being sufficient to permit Councils to open its doors to any fresh applicants. We have, however, the pleasure of knowing, by reason of the cause of the restriction having been removed, that during the present year, its benefits can be so extended as to keep the number of pupils always at five hundred.

In making our Report, it becomes necessary to refer to the changes which have taken place in the educational department since the 1st of January, 1866. Professor Corson resigned his situation in July as Professor of Belles Lettres. His post has been filled by Mr. Charles W. Coxe as a candidate for the position. The Professorship of Industrial Sciences has become vacant in consequence of the resignation of Dr. Vanderwyde, since whose departure the place has been temporarily occupied by two gentlemen, neither of whom, however, have become permanently connected with the College, leaving the vacancy still open, which we trust to fill speedily by the election of some person competent to assume it.

With the concurrence of the President, and by the direction of the Committee on Instruction, a class has been formed of those pupils whose intellectual faculties seemed to merit the distinction, called the graduating class, upon whom it is designed to confer the highest benefits of the educational department of the College. It is proposed to add a knowledge of the Latin to the list of studies marked out for this class, and we doubt not its introduction will incite the pupils to more determined efforts to improve the advantages afforded them. This class is examined every week by the President personally, and instructed by him in the various branches of learning more especially marked out for them. The working class has faithfully performed its duties during the period which has elapsed since our last Report, and it is contemplated to render it more efficient in the future by the introduction of machinery.

The Directors believe and hope that, with the increasing revenue likely to be derived from the estates held in trust by the City, the benefits of this noble charity may be more widely diffused than at present, and that double the number of its present inmates may soon be gathered within the walls of this Institution. It is true that, like all other charities, the recipients in many cases are not willing to recognize the beneficial results experienced by them from the labors, toils, and duties of those to whom their intellectual and moral culture is committed, thinking it a right, and not a privilege, to be admitted as participants in these advantages, deeming themselves as the heirs of the donor, and entitled to all the exertions put forth on the part of those entrusted with dispensing his charitable purposes;

yet still, in many instances, those who have been under its care have proved themselves worthy of the attention bestowed upon them, and have made for themselves honorable names in the community. There is much to encourage and cheer each well-wisher of society when educated men are sent forth to battle with life; and this is the object of our College. Benefits not appreciated as they are being conferred, are often regarded in their true light when time has imparted more stability of mind and purpose to the recipient, and the good work done here though it may remain undeveloped for years, will in the end perhaps be recognized by those who are its objects, and who in their turn shall be the means of communicating similar benefits to others.

All which is respectfully submitted on behalf of the Board by

CHAS. E. LEX,
President.
